The Class of 2001 is remarkable in many ways. We are celebrated Scholars, members of Phi Beta Kappa and Tau Beta Pi, graduates with distinction, winners of the University Griffith Service Award, athletes, musicians, artists and commissioned officers of the armed forces. To paraphrase Jimmy Buffet: You are young and impressive, if not aggressive.

I would like to write a few words about responsibility. I, too graduated from a great private university The Duke of the West if you will. Armed with an outstanding education, we are indeed privileged and we have an enormous responsibility to serve society well, because if not us then who? I am confident that together Duke graduates recognize their responsibility to follow in the strengths of our fore bearers, but not in their tracks, to follow their stars, but not the smoke from their dead campfire as a Trustee reminded us in this unattributed quote during his retirement speech.

Recently, I read Tom Brokaw's book, The Greatest Generation, written about the generation of my parents, your grandparents. This generation faced extreme economic hardship during the depression, gave their lives to fight a world war against oppression, and built an infrastructure that laid the foundation for arguably the most prosperous nation ever to inhabit this planet. This tremendous generation gave their lives in duty, and responsibility and served our country well.

When we look at the grand challenges facing this generation, the Class of 2001, it will also take great commitment to duty, responsibility and public service to eradicate hunger, drug abuse, homelessness, physical and mental illness, illiteracy and apathy towards our deteriorating environment. It is our responsibility to win these wars too for as Francis Ellen Watkins Harper wrote: "We are all bound together in one great bundle of humanity, you can not trample on the weakest and feeble of its members without receiving the curse in our own souls. And when we win these wars, my dream is that someday this generation will be referred to by your children, and your children's children, as the "THE GREAT ONES".

What will it take to be GREAT? For sure it will take confidence, courage, passion and compassion. You have developed confidence and courage during your four years at Duke. There isn't a class at Duke that you wouldn't take because you were afraid of it, at least not now. In addition to confidence and courage, it will also take wisdom, humor and compassion towards others.

"Wisdom is knowing what to do next,
Skill is knowing how to do it,
and Virtue is doing it."
-David Star Jordan

Your faculty have tried their best to impart wisdom through their lectures, office hours and evaluations. Success will require, as Brigadier General James Smith said in the Officer's Commissioning, "To take your career and responsibilities seriously, but not yourself too seriously". Humor is a great weapon in any artful negotiation and is a key ingredient for a good and favorable life, when combined with love.

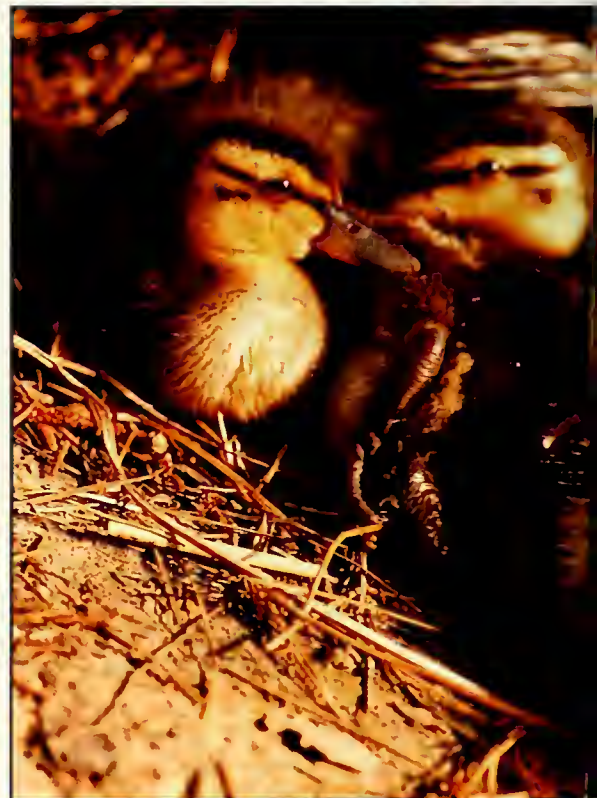

"Love and compassion cannot flourish without understanding, and we cannot understand and be compassionate towards others, until we understand and love ourselves" wrote Carl Binger. It takes courage to live a good life. Honor Duke, your family and friends, by having the courage to live a good life. A life filled with wisdom, humor and love, as well as a sense of duty, responsibility and dedication to serve.

"BE the GREAT ONES"

*"I don't believe in science-all those bits and molecules no one's ever seen. I trust eyes and heart, alone.
And do you know what mine are singing out right now?" -Drusilla, Buffy: The Vampire Slayer*

There are lots of ways to classify people, but the way I tend to talk about personalities has "artists" and "scientists" at its core. Fortunately these are the two fields in which Trinity College educates! What these two terms mean to me would be an essay unto itself, so I will leave them to your own definitions. Suffice it to say that I am a scientist-hesitant at times... I love artists. Because I do not have much visual artistic skill, such as the ability to draw or paint as I would like, for a long time I thought that I had none of the artist in me. However, by the beginning of senior year, I began to realize the art I had in me all along- the art of words. I have always adored reading, and the authors, poets, and lyricists who put the words together are my greatest heroes and heroines. I love finding a quote or lyric that I think puts just the right words in the right way to perfectly express a thought or a feeling, and I am quick to pull one out when talking about my own. I started writing (short stories, among other things) and through that, began to cultivate the artist within myself. Sometimes, I like to feel pretentious, and refer to myself as a writer! I also began to wish that I had chosen literature or some other humanities discipline as my major rather than chemistry.

By my final semester, I had essentially finished my major and distribution requirements, so I had a carte blanche to what I could take. I could have had a concentration in biochemistry with just one more class, and a B.S. in biology with three, but I decided against these options when I concluded that the concentration or the second major meant nothing more to me than a little extra ink on my diploma. I realized that I had been given a second chance to see what would have happened had I chosen differently- and that was far too valuable to pass up.

Unlike many science majors who (I think foolishly) look down upon the arts and humanities as being "easy," I have the utmost respect for them, and the thought of a plateful of humanities classes was a little daunting to me at first, since it would be so unlike to what I was accustomed. However, the apprehension quickly passed, as I realized that I needed to get away from the pressures of feeling forced to take a particular class to better prepare myself for the future." For three and a half years, I pushed myself hard in the sciences, and before diving back into them in medical school, I knew I needed to grant myself a respite from that- to allow my intellect and my imagination free reign to pursue what they desired. As said by Tennyson,

"To follow knowledge like a sinking star Beyond the utmost bound of human thought."

And now after having completed this final semester, I can say that stepping outside my comfort zone in this way is one of the best things I've ever done. Not necessarily for what I learned from the classes (as essential as that is at times), but for the act of flexibility and freedom itself, and the outlook which allowed it. As different as academics and life are from each other, I've found that success in each requires similar approaches: Take chances. Be passionate. Listen. Learn. Love. Remember...

Success

*To laugh often and much; to win the respect of intelligent people and the affection of children;
to earn the appreciation of honest critics and endure the betrayal of false friends; to appreciate beauty;
to find the best in others; to leave the world a bit better, whether by a healthy child, a garden patch or a redeemed social condition; to know even one life has breathed easier because you have lived.*

This is to have succeeded.

*Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen.
Welcome to another fabulous attack of nostalgia!
Where does the time go?*

*For me, our time together was like reading the old magazine
Highlights for Children: fun--with a purpose.
I hope the rest of your life is like that, too.*

*Thanks for groaning whenever I handed out each Short Writing Assignment.
That really warmed my grinchy heart. Now, close this book and get on with your life before I hand out another one.*

Having graduated from Duke in 1976, I found myself this year at my 25th reunion. It was fun, but also difficult in many ways. I have had the incomparable pleasure and privilege, unlike most of my classmates, to have not only remained in Durham for the past 25 years but to have remained at Duke. This means that for most of my life, I have been surrounded by young people, generally between the ages of 18 and 30. So, when my classmates return to campus for a reunion, I am forced to realize and admit that I am NOT the age of current Duke students.

Perhaps I should just "grow up" and at least try to admit my physical maturity. I certainly will never admit mental maturity. And that is one beauty of coming to Duke everyday. The youthful spirit and exuberance that greets me each morning serves as pure inspiration. To be able to meet with and interact with students who are ambitious and striving for success in all aspects of their lives truly motivates me to be creative and to always be searching for ways to improve the Duke experience.

Many of my classmates commented about how they wish they could return to Duke because they would be so much more productive now than they were when they were 18 years old. I do wonder about that sometimes. Would it be better for all of us if after high school, we worked for a few years and then proceeded to college? In the final analysis, it really does not seem to matter since most alums feel that their Duke experience was fun and meaningful. While my classmates reflected on the courses they took and the papers they completed at Duke, they primarily talked about the people with whom they interacted and lived while they were here. The activities, the clubs, the teams – they were important; but what really mattered then and now were the people that Duke enabled all of us to meet and get to know. What an incredible resource is created when the best and the brightest students are brought together to live, think, play and grow together!

So after being in this awesome place all these years, surrounded by the best that the world of higher education has to offer, you might think that I would have some "pearls of wisdom" to share with Duke students, particularly seniors, and I do. And that is, consider very carefully the type of environment in which you want to spend your days "working." For me, I do not see coming to Duke each day as "work" because this place is one that promotes and values learning and the sharing of ideas and opinions. It's a place that generates energy for me instead of draining it from me. With degrees in health care and law and briefly working in each field, I did not find the medical arena or the courtroom to be places that lifted my spirit or sparked intellectual thought in the way that this campus does. This "situation" we call Duke is truly inspiring for the heart, the mind and the spirit and it is for this reason that I have not been able to leave. There's just not another place like it.

I also find myself constantly wanting to give back to Duke, and I'm not so sure why. Perhaps it is because Duke so generously provided me with an enormous amount of financial aid, both for undergraduate and graduate school. Or maybe it's because of the pure joy I have felt attending athletic events and watching Duke student-athletes represent my alma mater with such dignified competitiveness. Or perhaps it's just a selfish desire to pretend that maybe, just maybe, I can influence a student's life or Duke's future in some small way. Who knows? I do know that it feels like the right thing to do.

Someone just this week shared with me a comment that Former Duke President Terry Sanford made which was "Don't fall in love with an institution, because it will break your heart." Well, I AM in love with Duke and at times, it has broken my heart. But, its students have always been here to help me put that broken heart back together. They have also allowed me, unlike my classmates, to look at them as my mirror and delude myself into believing that this place is really what Ponce de Leon was attempting to find. Duke is a "fountain of youth." I hope it never grows up.

CAMPUS LIFE

CAMPUS LIFE

CAMPUS LIFE

CAMPUS LIFE

CAMPUS LIFE

CAMPUS LIFE

Who were your guides through four crazy years of Duke campus life? I'll tell you who: those two adorable characters who have been with you as long as you can remember, the little angel on your right shoulder and the little devil on your left. Everybody knows them. Just close your eyes and you can almost hear them talking to you right now.

You landed on Duke East Campus freshmen move-in weekend nineteen ninety-seven. The minute your anxious, over-emotional parents drove out of sight, their exasperated pleas for moderation already fading fast in your ears, for a moment the silence boomed. You did a quick three-sixty. No parents. That's when the whisperings of your good old supraclavicular friends began to dominate your personal airwaves. The angel, Celeste, took over where your parents left off, saying: "The childhood years are over. Let the acceptance of hard work and adult responsibility commence. You've been blessed with the opportunity to benefit your fellow men..." At which point the Wicked Tempter, Diablo, piped in: "Whadderya nuts? This is the beginning of freedom!"

When you met your new roommate, Celeste was saying, "Smile now! This is your soul mate for the next eight months. You two will get on famously..." Meanwhile His Satanic Majesty was muttering, "Famous alright...this freak belongs in Ripley's Believe It Or Not. That outfit came straight out of a time capsule. I can't believe this sketch-ball listens to Guns n' Roses."

Diablo was still talking when you first strode into the Marketplace: "I smell pizza! Ice cream! We all scream for ice cream! All you can eat ice cream!" Celeste protested: "But look at this cornucopia of healthy options! What a gorgeous fresh salad bar! Let's indulge in the natural goodness of cottage cheese. And don't forget a healthy helping of that ethnic Southern favorite, collared greens!" "Not!" said the Arch-fiend, and you obligingly began piling on the freshmen fifteen.

That night your AC addressed the dorm with regard to appropriate dorm behavior, and solemnly outlined the alcohol policy, dramatizing the penalties for transgression. Soberly, Celeste was saying, "He's not joking. It is now expected that you will take full adult responsibility for your actions. You can't get away with that old excuse of youthful ignorance anymore, you know." Diablo was cracking up, "Not joking - HA! This guy is a joke. Isn't he a tad bit old to be living in a dorm? His wife has gotta be miserable. And who's he kidding? Your parents are paying mucho dinero for you to be here. You were selected out of thousands of applicants. You'll do whatever the hell you want. You own this place!" In the nights to come, over on West, the West Campus of '97 that still resembled the old Duke, before administration conspired to wipe out seventy-five years of culture in the name of progress, you had plenty of opportunity to engineer your own alcohol policy.

When you returned to your room, intoxicated, worn-out, you opened up the micro-fridge to find a lovingly-prepared package of homemade baked goods with a note addressed to your roommate, signed "With much love, Grammie." Celeste said, "Oh, how sweet! His grandmother baked him his favorite. We'd better just put these right back where we found them." But you were already munching, at that point succumbing to the formidable powers of the Prince of Darkness. "He won't miss just a few of these...scrumptious morsels...roommates share the wealth..." Of course, in your ravenous state, you finished them off in a flash, but began to feel somewhat queasy. You didn't know if it was the angel's or the devil's influence that prompted you to return the cookies to your roommate, in a semi-digested state, on his bed.

Then classes started. Calc 32 hit you like a speeding Lincoln Navigator. "Perseverance!" said Celeste, "Think of your future! You've got plenty of extra time to study. What about all that time Friday nights that you usually waste in slothful debauchery?" "Future?" retorted Diablo, "Where does 'Riemann integral' fit into your future? Don't study so much. You're missing out on the best years of your life. Relax. Drop it!" And you felt as though a great weight had been lifted from your shoulders.

But that pesky seraph at your right ear laid in a massive guilt trip. You suffered. You joined an acappella group in hopes of appeasing the tyrant, but the Diabolical One kept interfering with your conscientious intentions to attend practice regularly. So you went to church...once. After all, "eruditio et religio!" The gimmick wouldn't have fooled Celeste for long, except that rush suddenly usurped so much attention. "Round table looks like a very decent and mature group of people," Celeste was saying, "Community service, faculty interaction - you need to participate!" "Hogwash!" said Diablo, "You need to prove yourself by entering an elite brotherhood, a brotherhood inspired by the highest aspirations of Greek civilization, as a part of which you will humbly serve the Duke community, and develop the deepest friendships based on mutual respect and brotherly devotion. You will be part of an organization the administration recognizes for its priceless contribution to our university by awarding to you the very best living space on campus. Besides, kid, how else are you gonna get laid?"

And then there was basketball. Celeste nagged, "And don't forget to show up on time for tent duty! You've got to pay your dues for the privilege of being called a Cameron Crazy. You mustn't let down your fellow tenters." But the Evil One was saying, "Open your eyes! It's pouring rain, and it's freezing. What are you, a grizzly bear? There's no need to freeze out there. Just rely on your tent mates to pick up the slack. They don't have nearly so many important obligations to take up their time. And don't they always say how much they enjoy it?" By then your roommate no longer spoke to you, after the "sexiles," finding his hard drive overflowing with downloaded porn, the perpetual lock outs, and the way his grandmother's cookies kept disappearing...and re-appearing.

Yes, those pint-sized demi-deities did a lot of talking over the course of four years. They were certainly making themselves heard fall semester senior year when it came time to think seriously about choosing a career path. Celeste said: "Here is your opportunity to make this world a better place. You must selflessly devote your energies, and the fruits of your education, to eradicating social injustice, protecting the environment, nurturing your soul in the process, and most of all developing unimpeachable good will and personal integrity." But you knew Old Scratch wouldn't hear that kind of talk without putting in his own two cents: "Now hold on there, Mother Theresa. There'll be plenty of time for that. But right now it's time to cash in."

Do you think we busted our asses these past four years to throw it all away on some romantic pipe dream? The time has come to be strong, to flex the muscle of our Duke business connections, to pillage this great capitalist market in the name of the elite class of society into which we are soon to be inducted by the wise autocrats of this illustrious institution!"

In a rare moment of reflection, you asked yourself this question: Did Diablo have an unfair advantage, considering what a distinct resemblance he bore to the Duke mascot?

Diablo always has an unfair advantage.

Why those five?

Whenever the topic of unofficial graduation requirements comes up, it always comes back to why those particular five endeavors became the ones passed from class to class. Maybe there were others years ago that were eliminated through a peculiar form of social Darwinism. I don't know, maybe people decided scaling the Chapel was a bit too risky, so they opted for the less-imposing-but-still-daunting dome. Possibly streaking the quad during Spring Fest wasn't so challenging since there was a rather large cadre of exhibitionists among the undergraduate body. It could be that one too many seniors took an East-West bus joyriding the week before graduation so the Duke Police had to crack down. Or maybe it's been this set of five since a man named James endowed some little college in Durham on behalf of his father Washington. As a senior, we end up thinking about these ridiculous graduation rituals along with everything else, looking back on our time at Duke, our four years living amidst dorms that look like castles. The Bryan Center walkway could double for a drawbridge, the trash below a moat, lavish and sprawling quads like farmlands that spread out from a magnificent kingdom. We were kings and queens, princes and princesses, bishops and jesters in the court of higher education, building on the foundations laid by our forbearers. So it's not incredibly odd that our silly unofficial graduation requirements are also an elaboration of those who came before us.

In many ways, this is all indicative of us as people. We came to Duke from everywhere, landing on East Campus and trying to make sense of this brave new world. At the other end of that experience we find 1,500 people who bear only vague similarities to those featured in the 1997 pic book. Those individuals each had their own friends, their own hopes and fears, and their own worlds within the greater context of Duke. When each of us thinks of the Gothic Wonderland, we are thinking of the university that we knew for four years, which may be very different from the Duke our peers came to appreciate in their time at college. There are thousands of Dukes—each an intensely personal experience—in small, overlapping concentric circles. They intersect at breakfast in the Marketplace, in the heat of Cameron Indoor Stadium, or in the stale midnight air of Perkins' fourth floor. They diverge at friends, at road trips, at specific aspirations for the future.

In other words, most of us are close at the nucleus of our collegiate experience, but radiate outwards like the sun's rays when we begin discussing the details of that journey. So we can simultaneously laugh about the common bonds because we all understand them, and respect each other for a vastness of complex differences. That is one of Duke's greatest lessons, and a pretty exciting one at that. Now we get to run in an infinite number of directions, always carrying a piece of Duke with us.

The alert among you are probably nervous, thinking, "Whoa, does that mean we are missionaries for our university?!" Not in the direct sense, of course. After all, Duke is no longer a strictly Methodist university, so I don't think proselytizing counts as a graduation requirement (although maybe it is another one of those that dissipated over time). But we carry what we learned from each other as we move onward.

A decade or two from now, as you remove your old copy of the Chanticleer from a box in the attic to show your kids how cool you once were, remember that mission. Hopefully we all found a way to carry the best of what Duke represents as part of ourselves, and brought that out into neighborhoods scattered all over the globe. Then our Duke diplomas will have found true meaning, independent of whether or not we were crafty in the stacks or the tunnels.

The justice which began with, "everything is dischargeable, everything must be discharged," ends by winking and letting those incapable of discharging their debt go free...

This self-overcoming of justice: one knows the beautiful name it has given itself-- mercy; it goes without saying that mercy remains the privilege of the most powerful man...

-Friedrich Nietzsche, On the Genealogy of Morals, Second Essay

But God, who is rich in mercy, because of His great love with which He loved us, even when we were dead in trespasses, made us alive together with Christ (by grace you have been saved).

-Saint Paul, letter to Ephesians, chapter 3, verses 4-5

Stand fast therefore in the liberty by which Christ has made us free, and do not be entangled again with a yoke of bondage.

Live on, survive, for the earth gives forth wonders. It may swallow your heart, but the wonders keep on coming. You stand before them bareheaded, shriven.

What is expected of you is attention.

Your songs are planets. Live on them but make no home there.

What you write about, you lose. What you sing, leaves you on the wings of song.

Sing against death. Command the wildness of the city.

Freedom to reject is the only freedom. Freedom to uphold is dangerous.

Life is elsewhere. Cross frontiers. Fly away.

ROBERT LEONARD

STUDENT, ADVOCATE, LEADER

*If you have come here to help me, you are wasting your time.
But if you have come because your liberation is bound up with mine, then let us work together.*
- Lilla Watson

You are blessed. You are here.
- Maya Angelou, 31 August 1997

JIM LAZARUS

FIRE-STARTER, OPTIMIST... AND CRAZIE

The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others.

-Mahatma Gandhi

Work like you don't need the money

Sing like nobody's listening

Dance like nobody's watching

Love like you've never been hurt

-Anonymous

Talking about love is like dancing about architecture.

-Playing by Heart

There was a language in the world that everyone understood. It was the language of enthusiasm, of things accomplished by love and purpose, and as a part of a search for something believed in and desired.

-Paulo Coelho

What lies behind us and what lies before us are tiny matters compared to what lies within us.

-Ralph Waldo Emerson

When each day is the same as the next, it is because people fail to recognize the good things that happen in their lives every day that the sun rises.

-Paulo Coelho

Journalism is perhaps the only profession where you receive more criticism for doing a better job. I get worried when people stop blasting the Chronicle, because if we make everyone happy, we aren't doing our jobs.

EPILOGUE

Anecdote. Advice. Advice. Witticism. Final advice. Thank you and congratulations to the graduating class of 2001!

Clap clap clap. Stand. Clap clap clap clap.

Thousands have flocked here to celebrate this ancient rite, and now thousands flock out. The stew of black robes swirls with emotions that can never quite come to fruition. Joy trumps sadness, uncertainty trumps joy, anticipation trumps uncertainty. Every year this nebula of emotions is mixed, bottled, and served up, a blend of flavors so impossibly diverse that it's difficult to know just what you're tasting, or if you're tasting anything at all. Family and friends now wait, as the herd slowly migrates back into the world where feelings can have teeth. Marching away from their place of honor, the goodbyes loom, first days on new jobs loom, new friends, new places, new successes and failures loom.

And yet, a cool breeze on a warm spring morning, a burst of air so impeccably just right, is all it takes to whisk away graduation day ponderings with quiet suggestions of beaches and open roads. The caps on our heads, the diploma in our hands: these things seem to demand an explanation. But the sun and the clouds beg us to leave this baggage behind, just for a little while. And soon enough we're heading home. We might wait years for the answers to this day. We might wait years for the questions.
